FASHION WEEK SPRING 2006

"All Dressed Up"

By Danielle Badali

This year, the Spring 2006 fashion shows were every woman's dream. From Versace's curve-hugging skirts to Temperley's lady-like dresses, it's all about being feminine and pretty. And this season, each designer showcased a unique way to achieve this.

In New York, Alice Temperley brought a delicate splash of lady-like elegance to the runway with her collection of ornamented dresses in shades of rose, powder blue and sweet pea. Other dresses showed off bold, geometric knits with mirror embroidery and crochet inserts on cotton and silk fabrics. Hemlines ranged from above the knee to skimming the floor, all of which seemed to drip class and beauty. Temperley's simple silhouettes and feminine touches were a fresh take on the classic spring dress — making her collection stand out.

Also in New York, Anna Sui's spring line was inspired by French fashion of the 1920s. Her collection put a modern spin on one of the most notable eras in fashion. Sui focused on loose silhouettes with floral patterns of every shape and size. Dresses ranged from granny to baby doll, and many were finished with clean, handkerchief hems. Light blues, greens and oranges complemented a satiny butter-cream shade that looked as though it was drizzled on. To add to the modern feel, Sui matched dresses and skirts with western-style boots and long rope necklaces. For evening, dresses and skirts that drowned in sequin bliss were sure to be flapper-friendly in a modern girl's world.

The Missoni show in Milan was bold, fresh and pretty. Angela Missoni showed lots of detail with the Missoni-signature print, along with an array of chiffon, lace and ruffles that added sweetness and fun to the collection. Knit weaves and short sassy dresses peaked out from under "candy-coated" blazers and jackets in electric purples and blues. Missoni mixed these colors with beige and black to create a cool, sophisticated balance.

The runway at Versace was ablaze with shades of fiery oranges, "beachy" sands and cactus greens. The desert

By Kristen Goldy and Kari McElwee

When mentioning "fashion," very often, the industry is seen as risky. However, for Gretchen Miller, a former Fashion Design major at Philadelphia University, and her partner, Lori Hedrick, an unconventional slow-and-steady approach appears to be the right one. The Trenton, N.J., natives founded Lolo + Gretch Dahling in 2002, a collection of uniquely designed wrist bags characterized by patchwork detail and vintage feel. Recently, I was able to catch up with the creative women to discuss their experiences in the business. Miller and Hedrick have come a long way to the grand opening of their own boutique in the basement of The Antiquarian's Delight (between South and Bainbridge on Sixth). Miller recalls, "I attended school in '93 for two and a half years, then ended up dropping out for five years." It was during this time that Miller reunited with high school gal-pal Hedrick. They began brainstorming their future handmade-bag collection, while working several jobs on the side. Miller explains, "We did purses because it's a niche market. It gives us the chance to make one thing, and make it really well. Then we stand out more." However, in contrast to the strategy of most growing businesses, Miller and Hedrick rely only on themselves in terms of funding and exposure. "We've never taken out a big loan or anything," Hedrick explains, "we only use the money we make." This approach certainly slows expansion; yet Miller and Hedrick are proud to say the business has wholly been their own creation. Miller rationalizes, "We built it. We both put in 100 dollars at the beginning. We have a website. Then, every time we make something, it all goes toward the company." Likewise, the designers spent little on advertising, but in just three years the bags have gained notoriety and a market.

When questioned on the designs' inspiration, Hedrick credited the exploration of the average thrift store. The pair has also just recently enhanced their latest "Live and Learn" collection by collaborating with friend and tattoo artist at Eddie's on 4th, Bird. Miller clarified: "Bird paints [the designs] on leather, then we sew them onto Autumn is my favorite season. The days are crisp, and the leaves are changing, just like fashion. Our goal at StyleLine is to keep you updated with the changes in every area of fashion. Interested in the latest accessories? Or, the latest colors? Maybe you are more interested in the technological side of the industry. Hair, beauty, alumni interviews, the latest collections — whatever your interest, we cover it.

As you're enjoying this latest issue of StyleLine, make sure you look at the Calendar of Events.

The year is only getting started, and there are so many exciting things in store — the Design X Show in January and the annual fashion show in May.

StyleLine is a way for the fashion community at school to interact. We want everyone to find something that piques interest and inspires. This would not be possible without the contributors enthusiasm and community support. Also, I would like to thank Clara Henry, Doreen Burdalski and Freddi Ford for their endless patience, guidance, and enthusiasm.

The Look for Less: Black is Back

By Elena Economopoulos and Kate Schnitzer

For the Autumn/Winter 2005-2006 season, the color black has reclaimed its powerful presence on the runway. This time around, the simplicity of the color is being accentuated through luxurious fabrics, including silk, velvet, leather, lace and tweed. Designers, such as Calvin Klein, Marc Jacobs, Versace and Michael Kors, have used these elements to create professional, glamorous, and classic looks that can be worn together or paired with pieces you already own to produce more casual, everyday looks.

In this signature look from Michael Kors' Autumn/Winter 2005 collection, he updates a sophisticated suit with feminine cuts: a full, softly pleated skirt and a cropped jacket with silver metal buttons, a corset-style lace-up back, notched collar, peaked lapels, epaulets, and long sleeves with button cuffs.

This look is completed with black, round-toe leather pumps and a black-leather, satchel handbag with silver hardware.

Although this look from Michael Kors retails for over $2,700, the classic color and clean lines make it possible to recreate this designer look for a fraction of the price. The first piece to find, and perhaps the most difficult, is the knee-length, voluminous skirt. Banana Republic offers a full, black, organza skirt for $88. We found a black-velvet, cropped blazer on sale for $34.50 at Old Navy. However, we suggest adding a black camisole under the blazer to make the look more appropriate for a work environment. Target's ebony Mossimo Venise Cami is a steal at $8.99. To finish this look, add Target's black Uptown Barrel Satchel ($19.99) and Payless' black Jury Pumps ($12.99). Pair these pieces with confidence, and no one will ever guess that you only spent a total of about $165.

Focus on . . . Trends

By Stephanie Samsel

For Winter 2005-2006, black moves back into the spotlight worn in new ways with blouses, dresses and ultra-feminine tailored pants. Purple and shades of silver are the other new standout colors, along with some muted tones continued from fall.

Throughout this past autumn and upcoming winter, fashion is influenced by four key looks: country, military, aviator and romantic; or, as some say, bo-ho reinvented. The winter season is refined and glamorous with lace, embroidery and sequins. This soft, feminine style is strong with full skirts, blouses and tie-front tops over longer camisoles. Girl-glam can also be seen with cozy, belted cardigans. Fitted blazers and shrugs in velvet, corduroy and tweed are stylish must-have pieces.

jeans to eveningwear — seen on tops, outerwear, boots and scarves, adding elegance and glamour. Embellished or distressed jeans, along with dark denim, can still be worn for any event — dressed up or dressed down with the newest fashion items. Eye-catching, jewel-toned satin and sparkly tops are no longer just for evening.

Another recent trend is going from day-ready to night-sexy. Wearing gold day or night is increasingly popular using add-ons for a classy look. Intricate beading and embellishments make simple pieces look luxurious, from shoes to bags and other accessories. Metallic is still a part of the fashion scene in an understated way, giving off a feminine glow.

The most crucial winter purchase is the striking, long and belted coat. Chunky sweaters and velvet items are hot in stores everywhere. Skiwear is becoming popular, especially among higher-end designers. Knee-high boots with cropped pants or gauchos, cowboy boots with leggings, or skirts with tights express individual fashion sense incorporating stylish new items.

You can always be safe with a few trend-proof winter buys such as a cashmere sweater, leather boots, wool coat, jean jacket, velour suit, white blouse and a cocktail dress. All are sure to be in style, while keeping you feeling great and looking fabulous. The weather can't stop we girls from looking our best with the trendiest items, whether your look is sweet, sexy or sophisticated. With winter in full swing soon and the holidays right around the corner, keep warm and look stylish with these new fashion trends of the season.

Focus on . . . Textiles

Exhibition at Cooper Hewitt

By Danielle Swain

Textiles are being used in new and exciting ways which, years ago, we would have never thought possible. The Extreme Textiles exhibition at the Cooper-Hewitt National Design Museum in New York City explored new and interesting uses for textiles.

In fields ranging from medical to sport, the exhibition showed that there is no limit for the application of textiles.

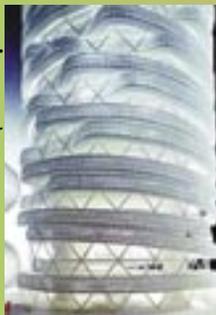

In the medical field, textiles are used to in many different ways. New, synthetic arteries can be inserted into the body to replace a faulty one. A method to encourage muscle growth in a deteriorated shoulder is achieved by using embroidery. A textile is embroidered and inserted into the shoulder. The multi-directional quality of the embroidery closely imitates the movement of shoulder muscles.

Wing Suit in Action

How about a building made out of textiles instead of brick or concrete? It is possible, according to scientists. According to a prototype featured at the exhibition, strips of carbon can be woven together around a cylindrical base in such a way that the building stands. It is supported by itself, relying on tension. Interesting to think about.

Prototype of Carbon Tower
<http://tj.focus.cn>

In the sports world, textiles are extremely inventive. There are new innovations that are meant to extend the performance of the athlete. Anti-perspiration and cooling textiles are such examples. And for the extreme-sports players, there is the wing suit. This suit allows the wearer to glide through the air at speeds of up to 100 miles per hour.

The use of textiles is infinite. They are used to protect our military, increase efficiency in space research, and even to make a bear-proof food bag. Whatever you need, you got it. The exhibition truly showed how textiles are present in every aspect of our lives.

Textiles are important in today's world. They allow for new and innovative products to be produced that can help people in many different ways. In a world where our natural resources are depleting, textiles might be the solution.

Fashion for a Cure

By Lisa Troup

Many of us are aware October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month, a month dedicated to all who have survived, fought, and continue to battle this serious illness. Breast cancer has touched many of our lives in some way or another. Thankfully, Philadelphia has used its passion for fashion to help raise needed funds in the fight against the disease.

On Oct. 19, the "Think Pink" Fashion Show was held at Grapestreet in Manayunk. It concluded a month of activities in Manayunk to raise money and promote awareness. The show consisted of clothing from all of the retailers on Main Street, a hair contest among Manayunk's three most popular hair salons, and a fun night of fundraising. The fashion show's theme, "Primitive Future," was showcased by using modern looks with very earthy fabrics and colors. The pink part of the show was done by the salons: L'etoile, Art + Science, and Glow. The three salons competed for the best and most outrageous hairdos that included pink in some way. Salon L'etoile won the competition boasting a pink mohawk on a male model. Speaking of the models, the entire Sixers' dance team, as well as a few Philadelphia Soul Football players, walked the runway for the cause. Overall the event raised more than $1,000 for the American Cancer Society. "To have a great time and raise money for a wonderful cause was just the thing that we were trying to achieve," said André Mitchell '01, the owner of bias in Manayunk and the coordinator of the fashion show. "It's nice to see people giving their time and energy for such a good cause."

A second fashion event for breast cancer takes place every year. It's Saks Key to the Cure.

This event challenges local student designers to redesign a T-shirt to be sold at Saks Fifth Avenue in Bala Cynwyd. T-shirts are donated to the Fashion Design department and then redistributed to area design schools. Alicia Farrow, a 2004 graduate of Philadelphia University who was working in the store that day, said, "The amazing thing is that 100 percent of the profits of the T-shirt sales go directly to breastcancer.org to fund research and fight the illness. That is something that we don't often see with all fundraisers." Alicia also enjoyed her own T-shirt designed by Rashidat Odeyemi, a senior at Philadelphia University.

It is nice to know that we can all take something that we are interested in, like fashion, and turn it into something that can benefit others in an enormous way. Visit breastcancer.org or cancer.org for more information on this illness and more ways to help those who need it most.

Focus on . . . Campus Fashions

By Lauren Bilofsky and Erin Satchell

As a student here, have you noticed how others always dress up for class? Have you often wondered how stylish you are and how this school compares to others in Philadelphia? As incoming freshmen, we have asked the same questions, so we decided to go to other Philadelphia campuses to see where we stand. We wanted to observe both male and female fashion and how living in the city impacts personal style.

We started here at Philadelphia University questioning our classmates. The general consensus was that girls here dress stylishly and seem to wear a lot more designer labels. When asked about this, Julie, a freshman from Bensalem, Pa., said

"There's a lot of sweatpants, but also there is a sense of style with cowboy boots, gold belts and designer clothes."

Next, we ventured over to Drexel University, where we found more of a typical university fashion scene — less emphasis on name brands and more on comfort. Devon, a freshman from Fulton, N.Y., agreed when he said; "I like to think I am dressy-casual. I wear sweaters, shirts, and ties, but always accompanied by jeans and Chuck Taylors."

After Drexel, we went to Temple to see where they are positioned on the spectrum. After hopping off the train, we found Temple a much more casual environment, where sweatshirts and sweatpants are the dress of the day. Krista Gamble, a freshman from Newtown, Pa., confirmed our suspicions. "Men dress in lots of casual wear," she said.

Our conclusion: All campuses in Philadelphia reflect the hustle-bustle of the city. Our campus stands out however, for its eclectic range of styles that range from designer labels to sweats. Here, everyone displays their own personal style. It's why Philadelphia University is Philly's stylish campus.

Shoes:

Boots are big this fall. The most popular version right now is the stacked-heel boot. Chloë got it just right this season with its Paddington boot, the perfect leather, stacked-heel boot to fit over your skinny jeans.

This season, we've also seen a new twist on the classic loafer. A high-heeled platform version was spotted all over the runways in a variety of rich, velvety colors.

Flats returned for another season as well, showing some signs that they may be here to stay. Suede, patent leather, velvet, satin, rhinestones, quilting, and ribbons — this fall, flats are taking chances and they aren't holding back.

Bags:

In the world of handbags, this season is all about luxury. Whether it's ornate embroidery, dazzling embellishments, or cozy shearling ... anything goes. Even luxury-handbag leader Hermès has put a new spin on its classic Birkin bag, creating a version made entirely of sheepskin and retailing for about $12,000.

Vintage-inspired minibags and palm-size clutches are making a comeback, as well. These are being shown in every style from tweed with chain-linked straps, to plush velvet and luxurious mink. Designers such as Fendi and Gucci have released crystal, gold and metallic mini-audières. While you'll have to limit what you can stash in them, nothing says style quite like them.

The season's most coveted bag is the Marc Jacobs quilted, multi-pocket bag, and while it comes in a variety of colors, the petrol blue seems to be on the top of everyone's wish-list.

Focus on . . . Color

Earthly Colors Top Fall/Winter Fashion List

By Amy Rose

As the leaves change color, so do the dominant colors of fashion. That's the word from several influential clothing designers and clothing manufacturers, many of which have shifted their interest from such colors as vibrant greens, pinks, and turquoise blue of past seasons to Fall 2005 palettes with an array of warm, rich earthtones.

The most prominent colors of Fall/Winter 2005/2006 will be Moroccan blue and full-toned brown shades, including glazed ginger and dark chocolates. Other important colors of the season include ruby wine, burnt orange, moss, burnt olive, "atmosphere" gray and rattan (burnished yellow). These deep, rich colors already are making their way down runways from New York to Milan and onto sidewalks across the United States.

Designer Carolina Herrera focuses her designs on a color palette of Mimosa yellow, caramel, gray and ivory. Her inspiration flows from natural elements, such as stones and gems, and also the artwork of Andy Goldsworthy, whose sculpture pays tribute to the hues and shapes of nature. Herrera's color strategy for this season contrasts light colors with deep hues — blush with raspberry, for example — to create an intense look.

Other designers are finding their color inspiration in a variety of influences, such as Cynthia Steffe's Russian-inspired clothing, Benjamin Cho's designs inspired by his own instincts (with a little "Superman" mixed in), and Nicole Miller's Nordic- and Viking-influenced clothing that features the silver patina of armor.

This season is all about lush, concentrated colors. It's a great opportunity to trade in your blue-turquoise sweater from spring for that lovely, intense Moroccan-blue number.

One Look - Five Ways

By Danielle Bacigalupa

One of my favorite things about fashion is that it changes. There's always something new to love, and my wish list is constantly evolving. However, my wallet doesn't always follow suit. If you are a college student, you understand my plight. With so many new trends it's not realistic to buy them all. It would be wonderful, I thought, if I could use an old piece in a way that wasn't just the same old trend. A couple of seasons back, we all HAD to have a brooch. It was the perfect amount of sparkle. Now, fashion has moved on and I can't help feeling like my little brooch has been left in the dust. I still love it, but I was tired of pinning it on the lapel of my jacket or the front of my sweater.

Frustrated and broke, I went to my closet and stuck my brooch on anything that would hold it. I never realized how versatile it was. It automatically made casual pieces into classy pieces. It only took me a few minutes, but it will carry me through the season. I had at least five new items to wear, and I didn't have to buy one thing.

Necklace: Amp-up a delicate chain by lacing on a brooch.

Clutch: Attach your brooch to a simple clutch for an accessory that's instantly luxe.

Shoe: Put a brooch on a shoe and it's like a brand-new pair. Don't worry, they don't need to match!

Focus on . . . Hair & Beauty

By Danielle Bacigalupa

Romance is in the air

This fall, romantic styles are flourishing. Furs, tweed and velvet are taking over. The romantic styles do not end with apparel, however. Hair and makeup trends are reflecting this new fascination with romance, as well.

Put your hairspray and wax away this fall, and get ready to let your natural locks flow. When it comes to hair, everything is loose, natural and flowing. It does not matter whether it's curly, straight, or wavy; just keep the style as low-maintenance as possible. If you decide to color your hair, keep in mind that hair color is going luxuriously rich and dark this fall. The focus is on classy, sophisticated styles, rich colors, and looks that are easy to manage.

Much like hair this season, the makeup color palette is sensual and luxurious. Rich colors help brighten the face during the cold months. This fall's eyeshadow colors include everything from plums and browns, to greens, grays and pinks. The classic red lip is back, but remember to tone down your eyes if you plan on rockin' the red lips. To go with the eye and lip colors, choose a blush that has plum undertones, or use a bronzer. These makeup shades can be found in every budget range from drugstore brands to designer products.

Warm up during these cold months with rich colors!

FASHION WEEK

theme was reportedly inspired by Donatella Versace's recent trip to Palm Springs. Her sunset styles showcased the distinctive Versace sexiness, with a newly found classiness that included smoother lines, longer skirts, and cropped, lean pants. A collection of three breathtaking "watercolor" gowns, that were as rare as a trickling desert stream, received a round of applause for their ability to practically descend down the runway. Donatella's line seemed to literally take you from dusk to dark as the collections' sunset colors deepened to midnight navy. Rich gowns that ended the show resembled endless desert skies scattered with diamonds that were sure to leave viewers with sweet dreams of Versace.

What was clear that the dress is the item of the season. This spring, stock up on dresses and skirts that hit mid-calf in floral prints and delicate colors to achieve the fresh, feminine look. Accessories were kept light on the runway, so trade in your big, beaded necklaces and bangle bracelets for bare, fresh and glowing skin. Look for light and flowing fabrics, as well as lace, ruffles and pretty embellishments on everything from shirts to skirts.

Perfect Model

By Amanda Patterson

Why is it that America and the fashion world have been turned upside down by Canadian beauty Daria Werbowy? She's unique. She's the strawberry that was thrown into the fondue bowl. Mysteriously, the strawberry and the chocolate fondue fuse together to make a blend that is like none other before. That's exactly what we love about her.

Is there something else behind her feline gaze that attracts the American audience? That's what we're wondering and instead we find ourselves buying those Prada and Chanel must-haves to somehow unravel the mystery that is Daria. We can't say that she isn't good at what she does. She's well worth her price, as fashion houses such as Versace, Marc Jacobs, and David Yurman can't seem to get enough of her. Daria has captured the fall/winter ads for Chanel and Yves St. Laurent, and soon will begin the Lancôme-fragrance campaign by the end of this year.

She is not just an American obsession either. The 5' 11" Canadian model's tall, lanky frame and chiseled features are attributed to her strong Ukrainian roots, and have landed her numerous cover shots for Vogue, W, Numéro, V, and Flare.

Over the past five years she has grown into an international star, often seen in Vogue Portugal, Spain, France and Italy. With long, thoughtful, sapphire-colored stares surrounded by a cloud of chestnut locks, she presents an unforgettable image.

Daria Werbowy is the perfect fashion advocate. She's soft, funny, flamboyant, mod and chic. She shines through the crowd, giving us the down-to-earth feel that makes us want to love her even more for her sincerity and honesty. It's as if she's saying to us, "If I can wear this, you can too." Her appealing charisma is apparent in a photograph, and is how she's able to land endorsements from the big houses, like Karl Lagerfeld's Chanel. She has been titled the "girl of the moment" by Lagerfeld and when referring to her, he noted, "She is much more than a model — a personality and a unique beauty, a rare mix."

Lagerfeld sums it up best. It is her personality that wins us over. Yes, she's more than just a model: she's the one we are all secretly jealous of; but, at the same time, applaud her success. If she was only gorgeous, she wouldn't be Daria Werbowy.
